understanding with the Chinese govern-Russian interests have been developed.

opening of Russian consulates is conditional upon the introduction of customs duties, and cites article 13 of the "Regulations of the land trade between Russia and China," which was agreed upon in August of 1881 following the signing of the treaty in the preceding February. This article reads: "Goods Imported into China by Russian merchants or exported by them will pay customs duties according to the general tariff drawn up for Russian trade in 1862. Goods not enumerated in either of those tariffs will be subject to a 5 per cent. ad valorem duty."

On this point Russia takes a view directly opposed to that of the Chinese government. Russia also demands that China abandon her monopoly of the teatrade in Mongolia, basing the demand on the Chinese-American treaty of 1844, in which monopolies are interdicted. The present prohibition against Russian merchants dealing in tea is onerous because tea serves as currency in Mongolia.

NEVER REALLY BOUGHT STOCKS. Sederquist, Barry & Company Made No Actual Purchases.

Boston, March 14.—At the resumption of the trial of H. F. Curtis, D. E. Bigelow, J. E. Barry and A. B. Sederquist, of the brokage firm of Sederquist, Barry & company, charged with larceny from customers living principally in New England, the assistant district attorney attempted to introduce a stock sheet of the firm, showing alleged sales, on the ground that sheets would show conspiracy.

The court said that there was ants, but permitted the prosecution to argue the point.

The assistant district attorney claimed the firm never bought any stock and did not invest any money for customers and that at the time of its failure the firm had 150 customers who were supposedly to carry 4,300 shares of Amalgamated copper, but that in realty the firm was only carrying two shares and was "short" 5,200 shares.

He also claimed that the firm was "short" 130,000 shares of stock in a
